1 Introduction

1.1 Project Background

The Bundaberg Regional Council (hereafter 'Council') is currently preparing a Queensland Planning Provisions compliant planning scheme for the Bundaberg local government area. The scheme includes a heritage and character overlay and associated code. Council recognised that the current overlay does not represent the diversity of places and historical themes in the Bundaberg local government area. Council therefore required the preparation of a local heritage study that identifies a 'representative range of heritage places throughout the region' and to ensure it meets its obligations under the State Planning Policy and the Queensland Heritage Act 1992.

The purpose of the study was 'to provide for the assessment and documentation of places of local cultural heritage significance in the Bundaberg Regional Council area and prioritise the preparation of 'place cards' and statements of significance for the recommended places.

1.2 Purpose of this Report

This is the final report for the project and it provides the final recommended list of places, the methodology adopted to determine the list and recommendations for the management of the places and further stages of work.

1.3 Methodology

The study brief required that the study be completed in a twelve week timeframe. In order to achieve a result in this period the methodology needed to be specific, focused and executed in an efficient manner. The following dot points outline the methodology, and the following chapters in this report provide the results of its implementation:

- The study began with a review of both existing information and consultation with the purpose of producing a 'long list' of potential places. The long list was intended to reflect a 'snapshot in time' of the potential local heritage places in the region identified in existing databases, non-statutory registers, previous studies and places identified during consultation. On the request of Council the long list does not include places already entered on the Queensland Heritage Register or the Commonwealth Heritage Register..
- Following the review, a 'short list' of places was prepared for field work. The selection of places was based on whether places reflected the key historical themes for the region (based on the Department of Environment and Heritage Protection assessment), if the place could be reasonably located and if it was reasonably expected that sufficient information could be obtained within the project timeframe to adequately assess the place's significance.
- The field work was then undertaken. The purpose of the field work was to physically examine each place, determine the integrity and condition of the place and to take photographs. An 'in the field' assessment of each place was made to determine if it demonstrated requisite characteristics that indicated it was likely to meet the threshold for local heritage significance. Places were also added to the 'long list' if identified during field work and not already included in the list.
- Following the field work, a shorter list of places was prioritised for further research and assessment. This assessment consisted of the preparation of histories, physical descriptions, and a statement of significance for each place. A place card was then prepared for each place using a purpose-built Microsoft Access database.

- A final report (this report) was prepared to outline the methodology and results for all stages of the study. The final 'long list' is provided as an appendix.

1.4 Limitations

The purpose of the study was to prepare a register of places of local heritage significance for the Bundaberg region. The study does not refer to:

- Aboriginal cultural heritage: this is managed under different legislation and in a different manner to local heritage places. Nonetheless, it is important to note that local heritage places identified in the study may also be significant to Aboriginal people.
- Neighbourhood character: although heritage can be a component 'character' is more about the overall aesthetic values or contribution of a particular streetscape or suburb, rather than 'heritage', which is assessed according to heritage criteria. Character studies typically concentrate on aesthetic components of an area such as roof types, facades and general setting rather than particular places.
- Landscape heritage: specific heritage places may have a landscape component (for example, a pastoral station or a park), but landscape heritage is typically used to describe a broader landscape that represents historical or natural processes across time. Landscape heritage in this respect is similar to character in that it does not necessarily focus on a particular place and, consequently, it is outside of the scope of the local heritage study.

It is also impracticable to identify and assess every potential place of local heritage significance within a particular study because the timeframe and associated costs would be substantial. Likewise, the number of potential heritage places is generally large for any given region, particularly one that includes more than one former local government area. There are also other logistical issues that impact the number of places that can be assessed. For example, if a place was identified in an inventory or community consultation, but not supported by sufficient historical data, the place could not be properly assessed without further research and the time and effort required to complete this may take days or even weeks. Other places may have also been located in remote areas, not provided with addresses or been located on private property. Consequently, the recommended list of places presented in this report is not comprehensive; rather, it is a list of places that reflect important historical themes, were accessible and were supported by sufficient historical information to enable an assessment of significance within the project budget and timeframe.

Although this point must be stated as a limitation, heritage registers and overlays naturally evolve as more places are identified and assessed through community consultation and further stages of work. Indeed, establishing a register or overlay often raises community awareness of heritage in the region and in our experience results in heritage overlays developing and being added to over time.

Nonetheless, it is considered that the recommended list of places presented in this report reflects the history of the region and forms an excellent basis to acknowledge the places that contributed to that history.

1.5 Study Timing

The study was completed over a twelve week period, beginning in October 2014 and completed in December 2014.

1.6 Personnel

The study was prepared by Dr Craig Barrett and Ulrike Oppermann, with the assistance of Simon Gall, Director, Converge Heritage + Community.

2 Review

2.1 Register Searches

Heritage register searches were undertaken at the beginning of the study to identify places entered on statutory and non-statutory registers. Places entered on the Commonwealth and Queensland heritage registers are not included in the study. Although they are not assessed in the study a list of places on Commonwealth and Queensland heritage registers is provided in this report in order to enable a clearer understanding of existing heritage assets in conjunction with a deeper understanding of the history and heritage of the region.

The management of heritage in Australia is managed according to a number of levels: world, national, state and local. Heritage entered on statutory heritage registers is regulated by a range of Acts, Regulations and conventions. There are also a number of non-statutory registers that are important sources of information about heritage places, but in-themselves do not trigger any compliance. These are generally searched during a local heritage study along with statutory registers. Places entered on non-statutory registers and not already included in statutory registers were added to the long list for further assessment during the study.

The following sections provide the results of the register searches. All results are as of October, 2014.

2.1.1 Commonwealth Heritage List

One place is included on the Commonwealth Heritage List.

2.1.3 Draft Bundaberg Planning Scheme

Seventeen places were proposed for entry to the Bundaberg region planning scheme overlay. The study brief required that these be assessed in the review phase. A preliminary review determined that the entire places threshold for local heritage significance and that the place cards contain sufficient data to enable their entry to the recommended list of places.

All places of cultural heritage significance included on the RNE are currently included in either the CHL or the QHR.

2.1.5 National Trust Queensland

There are twenty two places entered on the Register of the National Trust of Queensland, twelve of which are entered on the QHR and one place is entered on the CHL. The remaining nine places are listed in Table 4.

2.2 Previous Studies

There are a number of thematic histories, previous heritage studies, research material and general histories prepared for the Bundaberg region. This section briefly examines these in order to provide a context for the preparation of the long list and selection of places for the short list. The section setting out the results of consultation also contributes to this process.

2.2.1 Thematic Histories

The Department of Environment and Heritage Protection (EHP) has prepared a thematic history for the Wide Bay and Burnett region, as well as individual thematic histories for key industries. Therefore, a thematic history did not need to be prepared for the current study.

The key historic themes identified for the Wide Bay Burnett are:

- Exploring, surveying and mapping the land.
- Utilising and transforming the land.
- Working.
- Moving goods and people.
- Developing secondary and tertiary industries.

The thematic history is then broken up into former local government areas (LGAs) – the study was published in 2008 on the eve of Council amalgamations. The table on the following page summarises the key themes and subthemes for the former LGAs. It includes reference to key activities and places highlighted in the contextual histories.

The thematic histories for industries include the following:

- Agriculture.
- Pastoralism.
- Sugar.
- Timber.

These histories apply to the entire Wide Bay and Burnett region. However, the processes were broadly similar across the region and apply to specific places, including those in the Bundaberg region. Moreover, the histories include examples taken from key areas in the Bundaberg region. In general, the thematic histories of key industries provide finer detail for the assessment of significance of places in the short list.

2.2.2 Previous Heritage Studies

The following heritage studies were prepared for former local government areas now incorporated in the Bundaberg region:

- Woods Bagot, 1995, Burnett Shire Heritage Study.
- University of Queensland Department of Architecture, 1998, Childers Character Study.
- Meredith Walker, 1995, Isis Shire, Queensland: Inventory of places of heritage and character significance and considerations for management.

Other relevant sources examined in this report are:

- EHP reported places.
- A list of places for investigation prepared by Council and provided to Converge at the beginning of the study.
- Research material provided by EHP.

2.2.3 Burnett Shire Heritage Study

This study was undertaken by Woods Bagot and was completed in 1995. It consists of four volumes:

- Volume 1: Aboriginal Cultural Heritage Stage 1: Historical Overview.
- Volume 2: Historical Overview.
- Volume 3: Schedule of Places.
- Volume 4: Conservation Planning and Tourism Recommendations.

Aboriginal cultural heritage is not specifically examined in this study. However, the authors of the volume on Aboriginal cultural heritage provide some detail on the contact history with Aboriginal people in the Wide Bay and Burnett region. This aspect is relevant to the study, particularly the establishment of pastoral stations in the region and the conflict this engendered with local Aboriginal people. The frontier was particularly violent in the late 1840s and early 1850s and a Native Police camp was established at Walla to quell Aboriginal resistance in the 1850s.

The historical overview provides a chronological history of the Burnett Shire and Bundaberg City, as well as a thematic history of the Burnett Shire. This is a substantial and well-written history that helpfully combines documentary sources with photographs and survey plans and is based on a detailed reference list that heavily utilised local historical sources. This history clearly establishes the context for non-Indigenous settlement of the Burnett and Bundaberg districts and will be beneficial when preparing histories for place cards and assessing significance.

The schedule of places is substantial, although a large number of places are residences with little or no histories. Place cards were prepared for each place and generally these include a description, history (in some cases), photographs and maps. The significance of each place is rated as local, regional, state or national, not against criteria. Overall it provides a good cross-section of places, although the study is now quite dated and some of the places may no longer be extant.

The volume examining conservation planning and tourism recommendations is not directly relevant to the current study.

2.2.4 Childers Character Study

The Childers Character Study was prepared by architecture students from the University of Queensland. The focus on the study is 'character' within the town of Childers, and not heritage specifically; therefore, the analysis leans towards streetscapes and setting rather than specific places and their individual significance. Nonetheless, some historical information is presented in the report and it may also be helpful when assessing the aesthetic significance of places in Childers if these are selected for further assessment.

2.2.5 Isis Shire Heritage Study

The Isis Shire heritage study was prepared for the Queensland National Trust. Places were identified from a variety of sources, primarily community workshops, local histories and field work. Similarly to the Burnett study, the Isis study includes a substantial number of places. The significance of places was assessed according to criteria (although not a-h as in the Queensland Heritage Act 1992). It includes a good cross-section of places, although historical information is often limited or not provided. A history was not prepared for the study, but key historical themes were noted.

The study is also dated, like the Burnett study, and the same caveats apply.

2.2.6 EHP Reported places

The EHP keeps a list of places that have been 'reported' in the past, often through community consultation or via previous heritage studies. The majority of the reported places list for the Bundaberg region consists of places taken from the Isis heritage study. However, it does include a number of places that were not found in any of the previous studies or the list of sites for investigation provided by Council. Some of the places include a brief history (although the source of the history is not referenced).

2.2.7 List of sites for investigation

This is a carefully prepared list and almost every place is worth further investigation. The places also cover a good cross-section of potential local heritage places, particularly for the city of Bundaberg.

2.2.8 EHP research material

The EHP has compiled a substantial research folder including primary historical documents and historical photographs, primarily of places in the city of Bundaberg. This will be particularly helpful when assessing specific places selected for further investigation.

2.2.9 Other resources

There is a range of other useful resources identified during catalogue searches and consultation, primarily secondary sources (works of history for settlements and former shires) and historic photographs, particularly the collection available on the Bundaberg library website. These, in conjunction with the previous heritage studies and other resources described above, ensure that there is a wealth of historical information for the region and this should assist with the assessment of short-listed places.

2.3 Consultation

Brief stakeholder consultation was undertaken from the 7th - 9th of October 2014 and also during field work.

All participants were provided with an overview of the study, including the methodology, timeframe and the purpose. All participants understood that the study was being prepared for the planning scheme and what this entails.

Particular results of the consultation are noted in the table below. In summary, the consultation was overwhelmingly positive with every participant interested and enthusiastic about the study and willing to assist as required.

2.4 Conclusions and Gaps

At this point in the study, the following observations were made:

- The histories contained in previous studies and the EHP thematic histories provide a solid historical overview for Bundaberg region and associated key industries. This is helpful when establishing the context for places recommended for entry to the overlay. The history included in the Burnett study is also very helpful. The other secondary sources available for former shires generally means that there is no particular need for further thematic research at this stage.
- The previous studies, EHP reported places and the list of sites for investigation provided by Council at the beginning of the project provide a robust long list of places (over 400).
- The places cover a good cross section of historical themes and place types and are also scattered throughout the local government area, ensuring a good regional spread. This provides a solid basis for the study. There does not appear to be any problem identifying places that reflect key historical themes for the region.
- There also appears to be some historical information for many of the places, which at this stage is positive – although the veracity and value of the available information will be tested during assessment later in the study.
- Various stakeholders consulted for the study are willing to assist in further research and identifying relevant sources. This should make the process of finalising place cards more efficient, particularly if there are concerns about existing information or information is required for places.
- Consultation was overwhelmingly positive – all the participants were enthusiastic and keen to help.

Following from these observations, the following gaps were identified:

- Historical information for some places, including those on the short list below, is limited and this may affect the number of places recommended for entry to the overlay. This is despite the overall availability of historical information noted in the conclusions above.
- The veracity of some sources of historical information was contested. This is not unusual, but may affect the assessment of places on the short list.
- The age of some of the studies means a large number of places may no longer be extant or modified. The impact on the current study will be minimised through consultation with key stakeholders regarding the short list of places.

2.5 The Short List

The following short list of places was prepared prior to field work. It consists of over 100 places. Places were generally selected if they appear to represent key historic themes, a good regional spread and include historical information. The relatively large number of places will provide a good representation to choose from for further assessment in the later stages of the study.

3 Recommended List of Places

3.1 Field Survey

Field work was undertaken over a five day period. In general, the short list of places – and subsequent field work – enabled the study team to cover approximately 50% of the Bundaberg local government area. The location of all places in the short list was accessed, but in some cases the actual sites could not be identified or were located on private property and access (not achievable in the study timeframe) was required. A small number of places were identified that were not included in the long/short list prepared in the review phase.

3.2 Research and Analysis

A shorter 'short list' consisting of 58 places was then prepared following the completion of field work. Historical research was then undertaken to prepare a history for each place. The historical research relied primarily on key local history sources, each of which are identified in the individual place cards for places on the recommended list of places. Website searches, including the National Library of Australia's Trove (in particular the digitised newspapers) expanded the scope of research and yielded important information for some places. Further consultation with key stakeholders was also undertaken where gaps were evident for places that otherwise met the threshold for local heritage significance and remained on the preferred list of recommended places. In some cases, historical information could not be located in sufficient detail within the available timeframe to enable an assessment of every place. This outcome is noted against the relevant places in the long list provided as an appendix, where applicable.

3.3 Assessment of Significance

The significance of each place was determined through the application of heritage criteria. The best-practice framework for the conservation of tangible cultural heritage in Australia is the Burra Charter (2013). According to the Burra Charter, a place is considered significant if it possesses aesthetic, historic, scientific or social value for past, present or future generations (Article 1.2). These values are reflected in established heritage criteria that are used by all heritage agencies and statutory heritage Acts in Australia. The criteria used to assess the significance of places in the local heritage overlay are drawn from the Queensland Heritage Act 1992:

- A The place is important in demonstrating the evolution or pattern of the region's history.
- B The place demonstrates rare, uncommon or endangered aspects of the region's cultural heritage.
- C The place has potential to yield information that will contribute to an understanding of the region's history.
- D The place is important in demonstrating the principal characteristics of a particular class of cultural places important to the region.
- E The place is important to the region because of its aesthetic significance.
- F The place is important in demonstrating a high degree of creative or technical achievement at a particular period for the region.
- G The place has a strong or special association with a particular community or cultural group for social, cultural or spiritual reasons important to the region.
- H The place has a special association with the life or work of a particular person, group or organisation of importance in the region's history.

Each place is unique and only the relevant criteria are used to generate a statement of significance for a place.

3.4 Recommended Places

The following table presents the recommended list of places to be included in the planning scheme overlay. The list includes the draft places already prepared by Council (with some modifications).

3.5 Further Stages of Work

Given the limits of the study, there is an opportunity to undertake further stages of work to strengthen the overlay and the extent to which it represents the history of the Bundaberg region. These places are referred to as 'Stage 2' in the long list in the appendix. The following table lists the Stage 2 places:

Table 8: 'Stage 2' list of places.

| # | Name                    | Address                     | Suburb  | Comments   |

4.1 Conclusion

The 71 places in the recommended list presented in Chapter 3 comprises a representative selection of places that span the geographic area of the Bundaberg region and reflect its key historic themes.

The importance of sugar to the region's history and economy is very clear, as are the earliest industries: pastoralism and timber getting. The places tell the story of the early pastoral settlement in the Kolan district and how timber getting and sawmilling were fundamental to the establishment of Bundaberg. Pastoralism is particularly important. In a small way – and this aspect needs to be properly developed in a second stage of work – the contact between the new arrivals and local Aboriginal people is also explored. The pastoral frontier was unprecedented in the lives of the Aboriginal people living in the region and its impact was immediate and violent. The significance of this period in the region's history, like the rest of the country, is still felt today. While the stories told in the heritage study, even in its first stage, cannot ignore this history it is clear that more work is required.

The prominence of sugar becomes very clear from the earliest history of the region. Although there are important places that have not been included in this study due to a lack of access and time – the operating sugar mills for example – the study demonstrates that the Bundaberg region is without doubt the preeminent sugar producing region in Australia, and that this was the case from the 1880s onward. The sugar story also reveals the significance of the South Sea Islander and Sinhalese presence in the region and its industry, as well as the early labour movement and the debates that raged in Queensland and the colonies in the late nineteenth century about these issues and the federal legislation passed by the new Commonwealth parliament in 1901, part of the 'White Australia Policy', that sought to solve them. The Bundaberg region was (and remains) a prominent sugar growing region and its role in wider colonial and national politics was also important.

Many of the places reflect the pride local communities developed, and continue to express, in their own distinctive history and identity. The cemeteries are exceptional records of the early settlers and their diverse origins: for example, Britain, Germany, Denmark, Russia and Italy, along with Pacific islands, Sri Lanka and even China. The public halls, war memorials, even causeways, provide a window into the interconnectedness of local communities in the past, and also the importance of places that served peoples' social and cultural needs. Indeed, examples of transport and communication infrastructure demonstrate how places within the region – and outside of it – were connected, and how these connections helped foster the economy and development of the region. These places also help tell the story of the prominence of small agricultural communities and their early pioneers that are dotted throughout the region and continue to thrive today. The recommended list of places can be read alongside a map and the scale and scope of settlement in the past can be properly understood.

The time span encompassed by the study is also demonstrative of the scale of European influence and settlement in the region. From Matthew Flinders' naming of the Sloping Hummock in 1799 through to the painting of the 'Whaling Wall' by the prominent international artist, Wyland, in 1990, nearly two hundred years of exploration, settlement, industrial development and cultural engagement can be told. As noted above, however, there is more work that can be done and a 'stage 2' list of places has been provided in this study as a starting point for this work. A small investment will enable the list to grow and ensure the story of the region can be told more comprehensively through its rich stock of local heritage places.

Nonetheless, the places in this study – ‘stage 1’ – enable the story of the wider district to be told. The study results, when viewed in conjunction with the places in the region entered on the Queensland Heritage Register, mean there are over 120 heritage places identified in the Bundaberg region. Taken together, these places enable the presentation of an important and immensely satisfying narrative. The places of local heritage significance (and these include those on the Queensland Heritage Register) ultimately contribute to the continued economic and cultural development of the region through tourism and local government initiative.

4.2 Recommendations

The following recommendations are offered to assist with the development and management of the local heritage overlay.

Converge recommends that Bundaberg Regional Council:

- Accepts the recommended list of places presented in this study.
- Proceeds with the notification of the recommended list of places as part of the new planning scheme to enable consultation with the owners of places identified in the study.
- Enters the places following consultation (and subject to consideration of submissions) into the local heritage overlay in the new planning scheme.
- Undertakes ‘stage 2’ of the study recommended in this report, allowing sufficient time and resources to enable adequate research and consultation with owners of places as required.
- Appoints a local heritage officer, preferably within the planning department, that can manage the overlay and any enquiries related to it. As the list is relatively compact, it would be envisioned that this role is part of the officer’s wider duties.
- Maintains a webpage on Council’s website where all of the place cards are available for viewing by the public.
- Undertake heritage awareness training for staff that examines the local heritage places, how they are managed in the planning scheme and how to seek further assistance where required (i.e. speak with the heritage officer).
- Develops a local heritage strategy that seeks to utilise the overlay and places entered on the Queensland Heritage Register to further develop economic and tourism outcomes for the region including, but not limited to, interpretation opportunities and local events (using historic halls, for example). The strategy should also establish a timetable for periodic updates and further stages of work, as well as examine in detail incentives applied by other local governments in Queensland and around Australia.
- Implements incentives for owners of local heritage places as identified in the strategy, including, but not limited to, rate discounts, dollar for dollar funding up to a set amount for conservation works and free advice from Council when work is contemplated that requires Council approval.
- Prepare conservation management plans for places recommended for entry to the overlay and entered on the Queensland Heritage Register, and owned and/or managed by Council.
